Project Alpha

Writer/Presenter: Meredith Mathis

Editor: Jeff Harman

Production Specialist: Anne Edmondson

Audience description

- ◆ Our target audience for this deliverable is new technical writers who want to create a professional LinkedIn profile.
 - ◇ Core/ring users
 - Our audience falls into the “ring” category of people who want to use the website and/or app LinkedIn
 - ◇ Jobs-to-be-Done perspective
 - Help technical writers create a professional LinkedIn profile
 - ◇ Top tasks
 - Utilize LinkedIn to its fullest extent
 - Showcase skills and experience
 - Attract recruiters and/or prospective employers

Instructional problem statement

- ◆ To help showcase their skills to a prospective employer, we will provide new technical writers with instructional content on how to create a LinkedIn profile so they can establish a professional online presence

Narrative Summary of the Project Experience

- ◆ Initial inclination to take on a more complicated instructional problem statement
- ◆ Minor hiccup/aha! moment during week 1: Discussion notifications were automatically disabled in Canvas
- ◆ Our team exchanged edits using tracked changes in Word documents
- ◆ We provided regular status updates to each other with timelines
- ◆ There are probably simpler ways to exchange ideas and information, but Canvas discussions worked for us
- ◆ Overall, we communicated well and worked smoothly through multiple iterations of drafts

A Look at the Deliverable

CREATE A LINKEDIN PROFILE THAT GETS YOU NOTICED

LinkedIn is a professional online networking platform that can help new technical writers establish a professional online presence, showcase their job skills, and connect with prospective employers.

A professional LinkedIn profile is almost as important as an effective resume as part of your job search and can be a valuable self-marketing tool. Even if you aren't currently looking for employment, an up-to-date and effective profile can help you connect to future opportunities.

It's simple to set up a LinkedIn account using the platform's free functionalities without upgrading to a paid pro account. However, a mediocre or incomplete profile may undersell your skills and abilities and hinder your job search. An impactful profile will help recruiters or potential employers form favorable impressions of you and your work. Here are some tips to help you create a standout account.

A practical guide for new technical writers

When creating or updating your LinkedIn profile, you want to clearly showcase your skills, so recruiters recognize your value and reach out.

A 2025 LinkedIn report² shows that 72% of recruiters use LinkedIn as a tool to hire new employees. Additionally, 87% of recruiters vet job candidates using LinkedIn.

Create a personalized headline

A headline is a brief line of text that appears directly below your name on your LinkedIn profile and is often the first thing someone sees when they visit your profile.

While LinkedIn defaults to listing your current work position as your headline, you can personalize this text to capture your professional essence and elevate your professional profile.

5

Develop an impactful "About" statement

Like your headline, the "About" section of your profile is an opportunity to highlight your personal mission statement and experiences. Think of it as your elevator pitch for who you are and why you do what you do. Showcase your personality here and be sure to use first person perspective.

6

Connect with potential employers

To start, turn on the "open to work" feature on your profile to show recruiters or employers that you are willing to explore new job opportunities. You can customize this feature to make it visible only to recruiters on LinkedIn.

Engage with prospective companies or employers by "following" them on LinkedIn and engaging with their content to build rapport. You can also seek out hiring managers or recruiters for a particular company by utilizing the search feature on LinkedIn.

Thanks for watching!
